$ command line ruby cheat sheets

Welcome. You've reached the central repository for cheat, the RubyGem which puts Ruby-centric cheat sheets right into your terminal. The inaugural blog entry is here.

Get started:

```
$ sudo gem install cheat
```

```
$ cheat strftime
```

A magnificent cheat sheet for Ruby's strftime method will be printed to your terminal.

To get some help on cheat itself:

```
$ cheat cheat
```

How meta.

Cheat sheets are basically wiki pages accessible from the command line. You can browse, add, or edit cheat sheets. Try to keep them concise. For a style guide, check out the cheat cheat sheet.

To access a cheat sheet, simply pass the program the desired sheet's name:

```
$ cheat <sheet name>
```

I'm not sure if it's just a Philadelphia thing or an East Coast thing, but some of us here put ketchup on scrambled eggs.

 Ray Jan 19, 2005 11:25AM

NEW | Permalink | Report | Reply

In that same "ketchup weirdness" category, I like ketchup on my fried rice (to re: Ray — my mother's horror).

I also like ranch dressing on my pizza (a California thing) and mayo on my french fries (something I picked up from a South Carolinian, although I hear the French and Canadians do the same).

Another East Coast (diner) thing is gravy on French Fries. re: nooodles —

Mayo on fries is very European. Belgians especially, put it on their "frites"

Born and raised in California and I've never heard of Ranch Dressing re: nooodles — on pizza! I do like Ranch Dressing with onion rings, though.

 Christine Jan 19, 2005 01:01PM

NEW | Permalink | Report | Reply

Me either. Pizza? re: Christine —

Though, the original Ranch Dressing is a California product (Hidden Valley Guest Ranch near Santa Barbara) (thought that guy at Hidden Valley actually first made it in Alaska).

Anyway, I think Ranch Dressing can be considered a California thing (that has since travelled). And, they put it on darn near anything. Especially buffalo wings. But, I have not heard of putting it on pizza until now.
